

TYPES OF LEATHER BAGS:

Athletic bag: a soft, roomy bag used to carry sporting equipment and apparel to the gym, great trend setters in today's age.

Backpack: a bag that is supported by the shoulders with double handles and lies across the back. Backpacks are supported on either one or both shoulders.

Bowling Bag: A bag originally made to hold a bowling ball, this has become a fashion item.

Bucket bag: roomy bag shaped like a bucket, usually has an open top and shoulder strap.

Doctor's bag: A traditional doctor's bag is a duffel-shaped leather satchel used primarily to carry small medical necessities when making house calls. The classic doctor's bag is flat-bottomed with rounded sides, slightly elongated. Two large handles come together over the top for easy carrying. The mouth of the bag has a collapsible metal frame that springs open when handles are separated and tugged. The gaping mouth makes it easy to see into the bag and extract items.

Duffel Bag: A large bag usually used for travel or sports. The name comes from Duffel, a town in Belgium where the thick cloth used to make the bag originated. Duffel bags are often used by sailors, and are sometimes called sea bags in this capacity. All leather Duffel bags are Epic design icons and supreme utility items to own.

Feed bag: bag that is used to feed an animal (such as a horse); covers the muzzle and fastens at the top of the head.

Messenger Bag: A bag with a long strap to be worn across the body that winds around the chest resting the bag on the lower back. Materials used in messenger bags are often more durable and water-resistant than traditional bags. Messenger bags are often used by bicycle messengers, though they are increasingly becoming an urban fashion icon.

Saddle Bag: a large bag (or pair of bags) hung over a saddle. College essential, to say the least.

Tote Bag: A medium to large bag with two straps. Sometimes sold as a reusable shopping bag, this bag can carry anything that is too large for a common handbag – also called a 'Shopper'.

Weekend Bag: A bag of a size to carry clothing and personal articles for a weekend trip.
